According to these two patents, the reaction mixture is subjected to a pressure during mixing, to maintain the blowing agent in the liquid state. The bottom paper 2 and the side papers 3 effectively form a continuous open-topped trough, which could be, for example, about two meters wide by 1 meter high.

The slab-stock foam machine was run in the same manner as for Example 2. While the reason for this surprising result is not entirely clear, it is believed that the addition of urea to the acidic hardener solution facilitates rapid formation of relatively stable methylene compounds in the foam by reaction with the formaldehyde and methylol compounds in the resin as illustrated in the following equations: . The resulting resinous foam is then cured, i. Washington, IA www.
