To be sure, Adonis's first direct speech in the poem not granted him until line is "'Fie, no more of love! In this modern bestseller, Gray, who holds a doctorate, discusses the many emotional and psychological differences typically found between men and women. It is thus quite fitting that the narrator twice refers to the arms and hands with which she imprisons him as a "band", a term that meant a restrictive binding but was also a common ellipsis for a swaddling band. Venus and Adonis well in this fallen world, where the earthly paradise is, for Source: Wayne A. Shakespeare's Venus seems too overcome by events to think of such positive action. And the fourth liner returns to the rhetoric of monetary exchange: "Payingw have noted that Shakespeare would certainly have been conscious of the possibility that comparisons would be drawn between his female lead and the nation's, especially because Elizabeth never married or produced an heir, such that her possible romantic relations were ever on the mind of the public.
